The Committee on Financial System (CFS), popularly known as Narasimham Committee, was set up in 1991 to make recommendations for bringing about the necessary reforms in the financial sector. Narasimham Committee appraised and acknowledged the success and progress of Indian banks since the major banks were nationalized on 19 July 1969.

Unfortunately, the developments were witnessed only in the field of expansion and spread of bank branches, generation of huge employment and mobilization of savings rather than also in improvement in efficiency. Besides, corruption, fraud, misutilization in public money, outdated technology, and politicization in policy making were found to be major drawbacks in the real progress of the banks. As the banking sector plays an important and crucial role in the economy of a country for its stabilization and balanced growth, major reforms were urgently needed, after 22 years of nationalization, to revive Indian banks. This was not only in the field of profitability, but also in the overall efficiency, viz., better management of non-performing assets (NPAs), satisfying capital requirements, increased cost effectiveness and control, enhanced customer service, improved technology, establishing competitive interest rate, effective manpower planning, introduction of asset-liability management, better productivity, launching new products, and becoming more competent to face the upcoming challenges and competition from foreign as well as private sector banks in the era of globalization and liberalization. The objectives of the study are to examine the need and relevance of reforms in Indian banks, to assess the efficiency and profitability of Indian banks during reforms from different perspectives, to discuss various issues of NPA management in the light of reforms, to measure the performance of the banks of West Bengal during the reforms, to analyse the role of information technology and its relevancy in Indian banks in the era of reforms, and to impart necessary suggestions for the improvement of the efficiency and profitability of Indian banks.

Economic literature pays a great deal of attention to the performance of banks, expressed in terms of competition, concentration, efficiency, productivity and profitability. This book provides an all-embracing framework for the various existing theories in this area and illustrates these theories with practical applications. Evaluating a broad field of research, the book describes a profit maximizing bank and demonstrates how several widely-used models can be fitted into this framework. The authors also present an overview of the current major trends in banking and relate them to the assumptions of each model, thereby shedding light on the relevance, timeliness and shelf life of the various models. The results include a set of recommendations for a future research agenda. Offering a comprehensive analysis of bank performance, this book is useful

"Statement of the Problem. Over the next five to ten years, banks will find themselves in a competitive posture never before seen in the industry. This will develop as the McFadden Act is replaced by interstate banking and Regulation Q is phased out, removing the ceiling on interest rates paid to depositors. In addition the traditional lines of differentiation between savings and loans, mutual savings banks and commercial banks are fading rapidly. The banking industry is growing through a metamorphosis that will result in the emergence of a general classification of financial intermediaries. As if this were not enough, shrinking and even negative margins add to a bank's plight as the result of state usury laws and high cost money. In addition, banking has historically been a labor-intensive industry recently targeted by certain labor organizations. The survival of the regional banks will depend greatly on their ability to attract and retain the aggressive, innovative staff to meet tomorrow's challenges. To do so requires the organization to throw off the shackles of past compensation practices in banking and adopt a proactive stance. This paper focuses on the considerations to be made in developing such a base compensation program from collect-ing job content to evaluating individual performance.

This research combined with the practical experience of working for a billion dollar bank in the compensation area has provided the background for specific system considerations. 1. Point factor job evaluation program as it forces a decomposition of job features weighing each separately. 2. Quarterly performance reviews to keep the staff informed on how well they are doing. 8. Performance evaluation using behaviorally anchored rating scales for non-exempt staff because the process describes how performance appears in each job element at each performance level. 9. Performance evaluation using the management by objectives system for exempt staff as this staff is more results-oriented. 10. A salary delivery program for non-exempt staff built on a step rate basis to the job rate. Premium pay beyond the job rate. This complements the performance evaluation format of three levels. 11.
