Calling a show is one of the most public parts of the job of a stage manager and it is also one of the most creative parts of the job. Of course, for many people, it is the most terrifying part, too. It requires a steady voice, a well put together prompt script, & a plan for tech time to make sure you have all the time you need to learn the show.

When I was production coordinator for the Florida premiere of the musical Bingo, I was lamenting this sad state of affairs over the phone to the company manager, and she said that she had a great Excel spreadsheet that I could use to make my very own calendar. She sent it to me, and I have used it (with some of my own modifications) on every show I have done since, and have in turn passed it on to many other stage managers and company about safety, paperwork and the rehearsal schedule. During rehearsals through performances, the stage manager is the official timekeeper of the production and should call the start and stop of the rehearsal to the director so that they can keep things moving along. Calling a break during rehearsals is also part of the timekeeper role.
